MAJORITY RENEGADE OF THE YEAR

FRED BARNES

The Safety Valve

In keeping with Instauration's policy of anonymity, most communicants will be identified by the first three digits of their zip code.

□ I'm disgusted by Arizona's capitulation to the advocates of a King holiday. I understand that Arizonians were suffering from the economic thuggery that had beset them since their originally courageous decision. But what saddens me more is the pusillanimous Majority's refusal to organize boycotts against, say, Time Warner, for financing such affronts as Cop Killer, Madonna's sex book, Oliver Stone's J.F.K. film and Spike Lee's Malcolm X. 190

□ There's nothing new about the modern obsession with political correctness. It's been a fixation with Jews for 50 years and more. Only when other minorities adopted the same tactics did PC become "exaggerated." 805

□ How would you expect a white woman to greet the son of the black man she thinks raped and beat her mother 35 years ago, an assault that turned her mother into a vegetable? In the ultra-PC film, White Lie, daughter just can't be too nice to him, and invites him into her bed. The message has now become familiar: blacks are good, whites are bad, and the only solution for racial reconciliation is white female-black male couplings. The film ends with the interracial couple embracing erotically by the side of the road, as a black boy looks on with a triumphant smile, as well he might. 140

□ "Diversity," the magic incantation of our time, is in reality conformity. Any campus bookstore displaying Instauration would quickly find that out. 150

□ The conviction that the sun revolves around the earth led to increasingly awkward explanations for facts which failed to conform to theory. Yet men who challenged it paid with their lives or freedom. Today it is getting ever more difficult to reconcile events in Africa with the theory that all races are equal. Here again, those who dare to differ pay dearly. 760

□ I'm engaged in a personal campaign to convince as many fellow whites as possible that we are all targets. It's helpful to show them the declarations by black leaders to the effect that the only good white man is a dead white man, with no pardons granted for the politically correct. The thought that even if you drive a Volvo, sport a "Save the Whales" sticker, and voted for Senator Carol Moseley Braun, you too may come to grief if you get lost in Chicago on a winter's evening is an eye-opener. 606

□ Not too many years ago the impending secession of Quebec would have seemed as improbable as the secession of the increasingly Hispanic parts of the U.S. Both, however, are inevitable. Canadian subscriber

□ Last summer the Zurich police made two big searches for illegal immigrants. In the first, they rounded up 40 people—34 from ex-Yugoslavia, 3 Albanians, 2 Czechs and a man from the Dominican Republic. In the second sweep, they arrested 20 Yugoslavs. One was charged with seducing a 14-year-old Colombian girl, 12 with peddling narcotics, 4 with stealing cars. The 3 others were accused of falsifying passports and sundry other documents. All the illegals were immediately expelled from Switzerland. In English-speaking countries the laws as regards illegal immigrants are simply not being enforced. Often the police chiefs are in cahoots with bleeding hearts who throb audibly when anyone is expelled. Our real enemies are not the immigrants, who should be and could be quickly and quietly thrown out à la Suisse, but the bleeding hearts. Swiss subscriber

□ "The Gaping Brain Gap" was the most significant item in the November issue. As to what to name ourselves (p. 14), I still contend that etymological and semantical arguments are strong for "Aryan," a word which was widely used long before anyone ever heard of the NSDAP. In early November, I listened for about an hour to Elie Wiesel boasting about himself, his books and his race. About 500 bright-eyed, naive students attended the lecture. In the 50s my university still had a rather close connection to the Presbyterian Church. Now its chaplain is a Semite who claims a close association with Elie Wiesel. The president, an Aryan who specializes in Soviet history, is married to a Jewess. Political correctness is the AIDS of many American universities, which are now nearly as anti-Aryan as the television networks. 741

□ It's deeply troubling that someone like Miz Hillary Rodham is allowed to serve as

ZOG's #1 shabbas shiksa. I partake of the dismay that Bush felt when he wondered aloud why more Americans didn't share his outrage over Clinton's lack of character. The "character issue" was able to be downplayed because in a consumer society the only issue is money. British subscriber

□ Instaurationists might be interested to know that a small group of Jewish wackos called the Center for Democratic Renewal disrupted a speech by British historian David Irving some months ago in the Atlanta area. Police were forced to escort the Jews and their itinerant clique from the audience so Irving could continue his address. The meeting was followed by the usual wailing and gnashing of teeth in the press by several Jewish groups, the oddest being the Second Generation Children of Holocaust Survivors. I suppose our grandchildren will be dealing with an organization called the Great-grandchildren of Holocaust Survivors. In their wildly pro-Semitic report of the meeting, all the newspapers referred to Irving as a neo-Nazi fraud posing as an historian, without one reference to his numerous best-selling books dealing with WWII or his recognized expertise on German wartime documentaries. 321

□ Several of my friends who are not activists in any way admit the L.A. riots indicated that a race war is inevitable in this country. 920

□ The joy we Canadians were supposed to feel over winning the World Series was tempered by the fact that the Toronto Blue Jays team is comprised almost entirely of American blacks and Puerto Ricans. Hardly what you would call a glowing victory for our side! Canadian subscriber

□ The day I arrived home from Europe I was immediately jolted into the Melting Pot by the incessant touting of Spike Lee's Malcolm X on the three major networks. I can't see what advantage it is to the Chosen to ensure that the film will be a smashing success. They could send it to an early grave merely by ignoring it—as they did with Bonfire of the Vanities. But, on second thought, I shouldn't be too hard on them. For it is we who will buy the tickets and the limitless assortment of memorabilia—T-shirts, caps, pins, stickers, tote bags. And an entire generation of our children will grow up thinking this is the way life is and ought to be!

□ Being an educated Southerner I've seen ample evidence of the stupidity and laziness of the Afro-Americans, as well as their penchant for violence. When I was a child, all responsible members of society agreed that Negroes shouldn't mix with whites. So when Instauration came to my attention, its viewpoint on race was not hard to swallow. The facts hung together. My credulity was not strained. I didn't have to push and twist my intellect to believe what I was reading.

303

□ I must say that the only thing that surprises me about the Rodney King affair is why the police were so clumsy. If one must beat the tar out of some jailbird, it is properly done in a back alley, far from prying eyes. The new breed of policeman seems to lack the common sense of his father and grandfather.

330

□ One of the most puzzling questions in recent American history is why an experienced politician like Bush violated the fundamental rule of current U.S. politics—unquestioning obedience to ZOG.

229

□ In the year 1550, before we genocidal Anglos showed up, there were about a million Indians in what is now the U.S. If demographer Leon Bouvier is correct, in A.D. 2050, 500 years later, the country will have nearly 100 million Indians/mestizos. The "genocide" we better start worrying about is our own!

121

□ The media hereabouts have tried persistently to obtain a videotaped interview with one of our prominent lady activists. She says: "Okay, I'll give you an interview, but there is just one condition. It must be live." For this reason, the planned hatchet job remains on hold. The critical message here is that you should never, never trust the media to treat you fairly—regardless. They will always edit tapes to make you look so bad that, no matter how well you handle yourself, our cause will not be advanced.

□ How strange it is that Bush, Clinton and Perot are all southpaws. The ancients tagged lefthandedness as a tad sinister. A university mathematician I contacted figured that the chance of this happening is roughly one in 8,000. In the general population there is on average one southpaw for 20 people.

□ If Bill Clinton was thrilled to be elected President, just imagine how overjoyed he will be when he finds out he's been a leading contender for Majority Renegade of the Year. The only serious competition is his wife. Anyway, sic transit the great Instauration debate about the pros and cons of George Bush. From here on, the Safety Valve will likely be nonstop brickbats towards the new Prez, unless he experiences some profound epiphany. Actually, I can think of one good thing to say about him. If we must have a liberal Democrat in the White House, better a womanizer than a sodomizer.

□ Kosher Conservatives who watched what the Jewish attuned media did to their boy Bush, may now understand what authentic rightists have endured for nigh on a century.

608

□ A closet conservative friend tossed this at me: "There's only one way to change Joe Blow's mindset on the Holocaust. Put him in solitary and force-feed him a strict diet of Instauration-like literature for a year. Then, maybe just then, he will begin to think a little on his own.

930

□ Son of Stuka's stuff was superb (Oct. 1992). Two pages plumb full of poetry is not to my appetite, but after taking the first cautious nip, I bolted it all down and now hold out my bowl for more. SS points to the only path we must begin trodding if our race is to survive. There's no alternative. No longer can we spare the sensibilities of those who couldn't care less about ours.

953

□ The madness of The Tribe has overtaken America and most of the West. Where we were gradually slipping into decadence and anarchy a few years ago, today we are plunging helter-skelter into a very deep and dark pit, and there ain't a bloody thing we can do about it until we hit rock bottom. Then, maybe, the instauration.

Canadian subscriber

□ Did you hear about Father Hanukkah? He came down the chimney with a sack full of goodies. "Hi, kids," he yelled. "Wanna buy any presents?"

911

□ Not too long ago the media would have sided with Christian Serbs against Muslim Bosnians, because the former represented "our side." Now, of course, it's the other side that's always right.

300

□ Just a short note to let you know how much I like your zine and to inform Zip 207 about the historical origin of "cracker." It was started around the time of the American Civil War—in central and northern Florida. The "cowboys" there were called crackers because their whips made a "cracking" noise. Cattle were raised in Florida after the North cut off Texas from the rest of the South.

□ As usual, when Instauration arrived the other day everything came to a standstill until I had finished it. But Son of Stuka's question about the L.A. riots, "Which one of you. . .

stole Madonna's underpants?" kept gnawing at my intellectual curiosity. I think I found the source in Eldridge Cleaver's scabrous Soul on Ice. In referring to his raging passion for white women, the Negro writer, who is now pretty well down on his luck, penned: "I love a white woman's dirty drawers." Remember, Soul on Ice was required reading in many college classes in the 60s.

□ Are you ready for four years of co-Presidents Willie and Hillie? The Chosen, who enthusiastically backed the Romeo of the Ozarks, need to have a dose of inflation. They probably have a lot of bank loans due in 1994-95. No inflation—and they'll be in bankruptcy court.

600

□ How often have you seen a news article or a TV news item where some Negro spokesman, self-appointed or elected, refers to his constituents as "the black community." It is tempting to dismiss this phrase as an oxymoron, given the dysfunctional nature of the typical ghetto. The speakers use this term because it has a warm, fuzzy, small-town evocative-ness. It sure beats "the jungle" or "the fire-ant mound." Of course, we also have "the gay community" and "the Hispanic community" and, for all I know, a community for every identifiable group in this country, except white people. Just once, wouldn't it be interesting to hear some white city councilman, mayor, city manager, alderman, police commissioner or whoever refer to his constituents as "the white community." The sight of jaws dropping and the sound of deep-throated gasping would be overwhelming.

119

□ I go for Bill and Hillary as Renegade Couple of the Year.

319

□ Anti-German politicians are giving away the German store to Asians, black Africans, Gypsies and the like, all of whom never stop taking advantage of the sickening asylum laws dreamed up by meddling mongrelizers of the white race. Visitors to Germany tell me, "We were in small towns and we only saw a few Turks (or blacks or yellows), but they were hard-working." Don't they realize that, once these interlopers have dug in and brought over all their relatives, they will not be so peaceful? The media constantly harp on neo-Nazi attacks on asylum seekers. I call those young Germans freedom fighters.

781

□ I was in Berlin a while back and visited the area where Hitler's chancellory and bunker were situated. It's just a big swath of grassy area now, with a small mound at one end. I was talking with a German there when a big Mercedes pulled up and out came five men and women who were, shall we say, recognizably Jewish. They took turns taking photos of each other jumping up and down. What the hell is going on, I asked. Oh, they do it all the time, my German acquaintance replied. Sometimes they yell, "Haman, Haman, Haman." Some come and jump up and down in a kind of vengeful dance, during which they yell, "Ha, ha, ha, we won, we won." In many countries they put on this performance with little cookies, Hamantaschen, during Purim, one of their many religious holidays. This scene in Berlin, however, was extraordinary for its overbrimming hatred.

□ I was watching the Montel Williams show and heard him talk about "incidences" rather than "incidents." You can take the boy out of the ghetto, but you just can't take the ghetto out of the boy.

458

□ I was going to vote for the libertarian candidate, Andre Marrou, until I found out he had "converted to Judaism."

870

□ Now that Clinton has been elected president we have proof that the vast majority of people in the U.S. are totally insane. One of his first moves was to tell President Salinas of Mexico that he supported the free trade deal. If Mr. and Mrs. Big like the Mexicans so much, why don't they join them at the river and wash clothes.

775

□ I'm sure you've probably heard the joke: What does a Jew say after sex? Answer: Was it good for Israel? This attitude tends to pervade every fiber of their being. This is why they are so powerful and close-knit. We could learn a lot from their obsessive Jewishness. If we could teach this kind of racial solidarity to just 1%-2% of our people, we would have little to worry about. We need to make race and service to our race a major motivating factor at the front of our minds. Before every decision we make, we must consider: "How will this affect my people? What should I do in this instance to have the best effect on, or do the most good for, my race?"

660

□ I notice Zip 604 (Sept. 1992) was amazed to find an amusement park ride called ZYK-LON. Well, it's still alive and roller-coasting. I held on for dear life on a ZYK-LON at the Texas State Fair this fall. As to why Jews haven't protested, I suspect they don't know it exists. What could be more Gentile-ish than spending a day at a state fair.

788

□ When will you stop passing over Telford Taylor, of the Nuremberg show trials, as your candidate for repulsive white renegade of the year? He has long been at the top of my nomination list.

914

□ I jotted down Howard Allen's address and obtained a copy of The Dispossessed Majority. Everything in my life was put on hold until I completely read through the book. My reaction resembled the insertion of a platinum catalyst into a room filled with hydrogen and oxygen. Fundamental elements of thought that had long been segregated through careful "political correctness" suppression now came together with a bang. The book has in it everything that I should have been told at home, in college, in the officers' clubs in the military or in bull sessions with my friends.

□ I would like to place the name of Jack Kemp in nomination for Majority Renegade of the Year. I know there will be many candidates in the field and a runoff may be necessary. But I believe my man, who wears a beautiful smile whenever he's wearing a yarmulke, will win out in the end.

080

□ Several years ago Vidal Sassoon took a two-year leave of absence from his hair-dressing business to investigate why people hated Jews so much. I never heard the results of his research. Could it be that he couldn't take the truth?

110

□ In a detailed half-hour program on the black and Hispanic revolt in L.A., a BBC reporter stressed that just about every minority there hates and fears each other. The question never asked was again never asked: What is the point of promoting this "diversity?"

British subscriber

□ John Nobull (Nov. 1992) refers with some surprise to racist dogs. Visitors to South Africa commonly express this surprise, and we are surprised they are surprised because we take our dogs' positive hatred of nonwhites for granted. Nor do the canines have to be taught. They know from puppyhood that whites and nonwhites are different animals, and are enemies from day one. Their doggy instincts are superior to the lucubrations of our liberal politicians, who are only curs. I would propose that our next state president should be a noble hound, not another cur.

South African subscriber

□ The liberal, equalitarian "sensitivity" to the "unjustified plight of alienated Negroes" has become so acute our white military prison staffers are either blind to the spread of blunt, overt, black racism or are actively condoning it! Now that the prison administration here has given all ethnic groups the right to privately assemble, except Anglo-Americans, the total blatant reverse racial discrimination has finally become more than just apparent. It is now glaringly obvious. The primate population easily recognizes this backstabbing among whites and boisterously revels in it. Sometimes I cannot believe this situation is actually real. The only white men in this god-forsaken institution who actually care about America's future and their children's future are being treated by prison officials like the dirtiest maggots to ever crawl out of America's multicultural sewer system. On the other hand, some of this prison's most illiterate, reactionary racist Negroes are being officially complimented for being "disciples of great achievement." I hope all those liberal, emasculated government officials and media pedagogues out there eventually reap the fruits of their disgusting warped labor and wallow in the atmosphere of guilt, fear and confusion they have foisted on whites.

Prison inmate

□ Jews are hyperactive, but it would be difficult to say that what they are up to is wise or really serving their long-term interests. Whites are not as rational as Jews. As for the blacks, don't ask! In regard to the yellow race, the Chinese record is poor; maybe the Japs can do something.

208

□ The media have devolved into a political organ of the Democratic Party. The criminal justice system is no longer a justice system, but merely a "court of law," as judges now instruct juries. With our can't-stop-smilin'-president and Winnie Mandela as his First Lady, more and more people are figuring out there is little left to defend in what used to be called the U.S.A. Let's stow away our word processors for a while and organize into active, but peaceful, cells. More and more of our families are waiting to be rescued.

787

□ Not very long ago our heartstrings were tugged by maudlin pleas for Biafra and Ethiopia, with not even a whisper about their severe overpopulation. If ever our misdirected charity went down a rat hole, it was in those areas. Sending food to an unwisely pregnant woman in such a country merely makes it more likely that she will carry her baby to full term, so that two people will starve next year instead of one. And now, with a national debt beyond the reach of human imagination, soaring domestic costs from crime and social programs, the bills from two devastating hurricanes, the L.A. riots and a world market that daily becomes less enthusiastic about buying out products, we propose to feed and police the starving Somalis! Why is the public not incensed by such expenditures of its tax money? Perhaps because the media imply that it would be mean-spirited to demur? Well, it's due time for a generous dollop of mean spirit! Food aid should be tied to tenable proof that the recipient nation is waging a vigorous campaign to lower its birthrate and assume that responsibility as a sovereign nation. It's time the U.S. stopped underwriting the follies of multiplying losers, no matter how fetchingly dark their hides!

Majority Renegade of the Year

Has Instauration gone out of its mind, grown senile, lost its mental equipoise? Is the magazine ready for the loony bin? FRED BARNES, MAJORITY RENEGADE OF THE YEAR?

Why in the world would Instauration pick for its indecent annual award a decent Episcopalian WASP conservative, a friendly, personable scion of an old-line military family (both father and grandfather went to West Point) with four nice kids (one son, three daughters), a loyal wife and a ton of family values? Barnes is a bright, intelligent, hard-working 50-year-old journalist, whose reasoned and well-put comments often make prefabricated liberals on Crossfire and the McLaughlin Group cringe, as he gently but firmly points out their non sequiturs and the inconsistencies of their intolerant and intolerable fustian.

Fred Barnes? Why he should be the last one any sane Instaurationist would choose as Majority Renegade of this or any year. Horrified by the choice, many subscribers may now be switching on their word processors and cranking out some snarling rejoinders, along with curt requests for the immediate cancellation of their subscriptions.

The amount of confusion and ill-feeling out there in readers' land must be considerable. The choice of Fred Barnes does sound like an act of madness. But there is method in it.

First, it must be admitted that Fred knows the score, or at least 75% of it. Reading between the lines of his magazine articles and catching the inflections of his TV sound bites, it's fairly obvious he is well aware of the power of minority racism and the powerlessness of Majority racism. Almost certainly, he knows better than most of us that this country is heading down a one-way street to an historical dead end. He works for and pals around with the people who are steering us down that road.

There's the rub. Though he is on to what is happening, not just to his country, but to his race, all he does is object a little, disagree a little, rebut a little, all while depositing four- and five-figure checks in his bank account (he charges $4,000 per lecture). Like all too many of us, he'd rather be rich than right. Unlike many of us, he is actively working for the enemy, actively lending his journalistic prestige and his high IQ to prop up the politics and ideology of some of the most reprehensible creatures this side of Mars.

Barnes must be fully cognizant of why he has a job at the New Republic. He is carrying water for Martin Peretz, the Jewish owner, who not too many years ago was a Harvard assistant professor whose intellectual baggage consisted largely of adolescent Marxist claptrap. His dress code was typical—a black shirt open to the navel to display a dangling gold chain. Using the money of his rich, non-Jewish wife, he bought the New Republic and remade it in his image. The liberalism and exudations of class and racial warfare were almost suffocating. Then one day, as his mind slithered away from Marxism and veered towards Zionism, Peretz suddenly realized that honest liberals (there are a few) were less likely to be pro-Israeli than dishonest conservatives, of whom there are many. Presto! The New Republic adopted a neoconservative line and actively boosted Reagan and Bush, especially the latter when he chased Saddam Hussein out of Kuwait and trounced Israel's most threatening neighbor. It was in those happy, warmongering days that Barnes's job was to mask the raging Zionism with a dollop of respectable Republican commentary and political balance. The New Republic's editorials radically metamorphosed, however, when Bush temporarily delayed Israel's demand for a $10-billion loan guarantee. Suddenly Peretz, who keeps in touch with his long-time friend, Ivan Boesky, became a Democrat again, not to mention a Clinton booster. Peretz's neoconservatism is now what? Neoliberalism? Whatever it is, it is still Israel über alles.

Today Barnes, as a senior editor of the New Republic, not only works directly under Peretz, but also under the magazine's second-in-command, Andrew Sullivan, a British homo whose duty it is to inject some literary preciousness in the magazine and in the process attract a slew of new subscribers from the Colorado boycott crowd.

Without Barnes and hundreds of Majority writers like him, the N.Y. Times, Washington Post, the networks, Time, Newsweek and the lesser Jewish organs of "opinion," would be reduced to something little better than tabloids, something like the New York Post. It takes industrious Majority members to keep these enterprises running, do the research and the proofreading, control the endemic Jewish politicking and proselytizing. With the camouflage removed and nothing but the teeth of the enemy showing, even the blind among us would spot the Semitism sandwiched between the glossy ads and the incessant commercials on the nightly news. Barnes and the many Majority writers and thinkers like Barnes must be severely faulted for allowing themselves to be exploited by these minority mediamasters. They are making the minorities' task all the easier. A good man who works for the enemy is more dangerous to the home team than an evil man.

Some day Fred Barnes has got to realize that, hard as it may be on his bank account, he has got to stop writing for "them" and start writing for "us." He has got to transfer his brainpower from big-circulation magazines and high-rated TV shows to pro-Majority magazines with minuscule circulations and to homemade pro-Majority videotapes that, with luck, may appear on some low-wattage cable station.

Separatism is the only "ism" that will save the American Majority. It must be extended into every facet of modern American life, most of all in the media. If the best a talented Majority writer can do is become a housebroken or token conservative on talk shows or in the print media, a job in which he can never say more than 50% of what he really thinks, then he's simply got to speak out, be fired, take a job in a factory and write or lecture at night.

Until Fred Barnes and all the brainy Majority members like Barnes decide to bite the bullet and take this route, they will remain among the top contenders for Majority Renegade of the Year.

Appointment in Somalia

Come January 20, Bush of Arabia (more recently of Somalia) will be out of the White House. Always considerate, he is not the type to forget to leave the light on for the new tenants, Bill and Hillary. Time will tell whether the 42nd president will go down in history as Clinton of Somalia.

Unremarkable will probably be the best word to characterize the performance of the new Commander in Chief in his first weeks in the Oval Office. An overwhelming number of officers and enlisted men are dead set against Clinton's promise to lift the Pentagon's ban on pansies, fairies, lesbians, bull dykes and other assorted fruits in the Armed Forces—so dead set that Colonel David Hackworth, America's most decorated soldier, said in a radio interview that some G.I.s had told him they would actually kill Clinton if he should set foot on their post. What the future has in store, if Clinton has his way, was demonstrated by a "kiss-in" staged by homosexuals in Senator Sam Nunn's office to punish the chairman of the Armed Services Committee for letting two aides go because of their "sexual orientation."

Clinton is also raising the hackles of men in uniform by supporting the plans of his minority-ridden entourage to assign women to combat duty, not just on warships and warplanes, but on the battlefield. Counterarguments to this far-out policy have been silenced by references to the Israeli Defense Forces, which are credited with putting Jewish females on the front lines. The reference to Israel strengthens the women-in-combat case no end, since anything Zionists do is good, right, smart and, most important, uncriticizable, at least by the multitude of congressmen who manage to hold on to their jobs, thanks to lavish funds from Jewish PACs and lavish outpourings of praise from the media. The trouble is, all this talk about Israel's fighting women is pure moonshine. Some Jewish Amazons did get thrust into the front lines of the first days of the 1973 Yom Kippur War when Egyptian forces broke through Israeli defenses in the Sinai. But, after watching a half dozen or so female soldiers return in body bags, even screaming war hawks like Ariel Sharon threw in the towel and stationed IDF females well in the rear of combat zones.

In one sense, Clinton's willingness to stir up opposition in the military may be the Dispossessed Majority's cup of tea. There is little or no possibility that Majority members can win back their country and recapture their kidnapped culture until and unless the Armed Forces become politicized. A neutral army serves whoever is in power and whatever political ideology happens to be in the ascendant. Since the Majority has become almost powerless, the military is ipso facto an anti-Majority element in the national scene. A politicized army in which Majority members still outnumber blacks, Hispanics and other minorityites might be the one force that could end or at least significantly slow down the Brazilification of the U.S.

Clinton should consider, but probably won't, that a ragtag mix of demoralized troops, with both sexes sharing pit latrines and new recruits being propositioned by homosexuals in their barracks, is not likely to do too well when the guns go off in anger. It's one thing to "conquer" the sleepy island of Grenada or push the buttons of high-tech weapons that blast to smithereens a bunch of Iraqi camel jockeys, unprotected by ground or air cover. It's quite another to be outnumbered and attacked by a Korean-Chinese force of dedicated, hardcore Communists (quasi-nationalists) supplied with state-of-the-art Soviet weapons or war against tough Vietnamese Communist (also quasi-nationalist) guerrillas in a tropical jungle where superior firepower cannot home in on a sufficient number of human targets.

If American soldiers manage to bring some kind of order out of the Somali mess, it will augment the clout and prestige of the Beltway insiders and Ivy League professors who will saturate the Clinton administration. On the other hand, the death of a score of G.I.s in a Somali shantytown would bring this country closer to Der Tag—when all scores will be settled and America will either reenter history or transmogrify into a horror story.

Of all the wasteful and counterproductive crusades that the U.S. has engaged in in the last 100 years, the Somali expedition takes the cake. A country whose leaders will starve tens of thousands of their own people, even thousands of their own clansmen (the Somali population of 8 million is scattered among 100 clans), to acquire or maintain power, a country that has fallen apart at the seams from endless civil wars, wars against neighboring states and political corruption, a country led by some of the sorriest examples of mankind can only be saved from the inside, not by a foreign invasion, peaceful or otherwise.

Much of black Africa is approaching the wretched condition of Somalia. More than $130 billion has been pumped into black African nations between 1960-1990, and most of it has already gone up in smoke. Is the next shipment of G.I.s to be sent to Zimbabwe, Malawi, Mozambique and Zaire, where famine is in the making and 19 million are already short of food? Meanwhile, in Somalia, with no one sowing the crops for the next harvest, the population, starving or not, will keep on breeding with the inevitable result that the next generation of starving people will be twice as numerous as the present one.

Couldn't the American military be used more constructively by guarding the southern borders of the U.S. to prevent the country from becoming another political, economic and social disaster on the Latin American model? Are there no hungry mouths and homeless in American cities? What is the sense of putting a huge pool of military manpower to work for faraway blacks who will revert to their customary anarchy and barbarism the moment the troops are pulled out?

Multiculturalism, the cause of so much grief and frustration at home, appeals to the altruism which occupies such a large space in human hearts, an altruism that is easily manipulated by world savers into constant meddling in the affairs of foreign nations. In the case of Somalia, the syndrome, backed up by nightly television shots of living skeletons, actually extends beyond altruism into a sort of extraterritorial fixation that can best be described as "otherism." The emphasis is always on looking outward, never inward. While blacks in the U.S. kill whites by the thousands each year and rape white women by the tens of thousands, a white and black army is sent abroad to resuscitate and patrol a black state that would be scorned and derided by neolithic tribesmen if they could come back from the dead for an hour and stroll through the streets of Mogadishu.

Civilization depends on a neat balance of egotism and altruism. When egotism expands into anarchy and altruism into "otherism," the balance is destroyed. Somalia has already reached the anarchic extreme. America, despite its problems at home (race war, deficits, crime), is in the grip of "otherism." Somalia may well be a preview of America in the mid-21st century.

Eduardo Galeano: Latin America's Lily White Apologist

It is a truism that troubled regions tend to produce some of the best literature. There are few places in the world more troubled than Latin America, a vast territory that has produced more than its share of first-rate writers. The Spanish cultural tradition has always bestowed more favor and kudos on literary folk, lawyers and other kinds of purely intellectual workers than it has on those attuned to life's more practical aspects, such as engineers, agronomists or telephone repairmen. As a result, you can go to any Latin American city and find the most charming, erudite, sophisticated and worldly people you are ever likely to meet, but you will be out of luck if you need to get the telephone fixed or if your hot water heater breaks down. I must add in all fairness that auto mechanics are plentiful, competent and—surprise, surprise—relatively honest.

I'm pretty sure that few readers of Instauration know of Eduardo Galeano, a Latin American author who ranks in some eyes with Gabriel García Márquez, Carlos Fuentes or Mario Vargas Llosa. Part of the reason is that Galeano has not yet enjoyed the commercial success in the U. S. market that the others have. The other part is that, unlike the others, Galeano, a Uruguayan, is fiercely political. García, Fuentes and Vargas all hold strong political opinions, but tend to bury them in their works. Galeano, on the other hand, is probably best known for his nonfictional overview of Latin American history, Open Veins of Latin America: Five Centuries of the Pillage of a Continent (Monthly Review Press, New York and London, 1973). His other work, although a blend of fact and fiction, also tends to focus on the real world.

Galeano, an unabashed, unrepentant Marxist, is considerably more honest and critical than the average member of that breed. In his latest book, We Say No, a collection of essays on the current situation in Latin America, but containing material dating back to 1963, he roundly condemns the Soviet Empire and applauds its fall. He even ventures to cast a few sidelong arrows at the dictatorship of Fidel Castro, while blaming the U.S. for the mountainous problems that have afflicted Cuba.

Galeano's full name is Eduardo Hughes Galeano, Hughes being his father's name and Galeano his mother's. Contrary to the accepted custom in Spanish-speaking America, he uses his mother's name. Quite sensitive on this point, he has written a couple of short essays to explain the whys and wherefores for his sensitivity. What is clear is that Galeano is in the throes of an identity crisis. That he is a white man, without a drop of Indian or Negro blood in his veins, is not a plus in the Latin American literary pantheon. All his ancestors were from Wales, Spain, Italy and Germany, as he freely admits. Galeano says he avoids the use of his last name, Hughes, because it is almost impossible for Latin Americans to pronounce it correctly, much less spell. Frankly, I think he is telling a white lie. Nevertheless, a man has a right to call himself what he wishes to, provided he does not have an underhanded motive (such as members of a certain ethnic group, who change their names to lull their fellow citizens into a false sense of security). Galeano is certainly not ashamed of his father, whom he admires, and I can attest to the truth of his claim that our neighbors south of the border have difficulty pronouncing or spelling English names.

Open Veins of Latin America is a fascinating book. It gives us a large dose of little-known history about the continent to the south, while at the same time offering as concise and complete an explanation of the Third World mind as you are likely to find in any language. Galeano is probably unaware that only a man like himself, a person of European background, could produce such a logical, rational work on such an emotional subject.

The casual American reader will initially be repelled—and with good reason—by Galeano's attempt to place all the blame for Latin America's ills on the U.S., Great Britain or the largely white, regional Spanish elite. In Galeano's eyes the vast mass of mestizo, Indian and black Latin Americans are pure, selfless, decent human beings, battered by the tides of history and by the greed, cruelty and stupidity of their masters.

There is much truth in this observation. Exploitation has been developed to an art form in Latin America. It is sheer hell to be born poor in any country south of the Rio Grande.

What Galeano steadfastly denies, repeating it almost as a catechism, is that race has had anything to do with the overall failure of the Latin American countries to compete with their neighbors to the north, although, unlike so many American and European writers, he is well aware of the racial arguments advanced to explain Hispanic backwardness. He makes repeated references to them, but he is too smart—and it would be too painful—to really examine the validity of these claims. So he keeps silent on such matters. I half suspect that he is all too knowledgeable about Latin America's real problems, but his Marxist training stops him from undertaking a serious study of the situation.

For all his distrust and dislike of Yankees, however, Galeano does not hesitate to give credit where credit is due when discussing the different histories of Latin America and the U.S., thereby bolstering my theory that he is one of those sorriest of creatures, a brilliant, race-conscious white, trapped by circumstances in an alien milieu, where he is forced to wear a mask to acquire respectability and acceptability.

Despite all his faults, Galeano has a heart that burns with compassion and affection for his fellow humans. Although his Marxist mindset erects steel bars around his brain, he reaches out between them. Growing up a Latin American, Galeano has learned to hate the injustice, the poverty and the hypocrisy rampant in his continent. Casting his eye on the blacks, Indians and mestizos, he has decided that, because of their suffering, they must be the elect of God. An atheist, Galeano manages to translate this religious notion into a left-wing political platform.

Unable to accept what is obvious to most visitors to Latin America, that its problems are the fault of all its people, rich and poor, black, white and in between, Galeano falls back on standard Marxist interpretations to try to explain away what would be too embarrassing to admit. This failing, however, does not detract from the value of his writings, which are a joy to peruse and which provide the reader with a better understanding of Latin America than a score of scholarly tomes.

Other than Open Veins—a must read—Galeano has published a trilogy on Latin American history, Memory of Fire: Genesis, Faces and Masks and Century of the Wind, ranging from pre-Conquest times to the present day. His technique is to write a short essay on specific historic incidents for almost every year from 1492 on. The effect is electric.

We Say No is Galeano's plea against the abuses of unbridled finance capitalism. If you can wade through his annoying habit of injecting the Sandinistas and socialism into any subject he writes about, you will find that the plague of greed which is slowly destroying America and Europe has already done its dirty work in the shanty towns of Caracas, Bogotá and Rio.

If there is anything about Galeano that really irritates me, it is his seeming inability to free himself from a few idées fixes. First, socialism of the leftist variety has apparently become his ersatz religion. He cannot see that, if it could not succeed with Europeans, it surely is not going to work with Latin Americans. Second, he goes overboard about the Sandinistas. I would describe it as some kind of homosexual mind warp if he had not been married three times. For Instaurationists, who may have forgotten, the Sandinistas were without doubt the nastiest, most ignorant, most incompetent and silliest Communists who ever raised clenched fists in Latin America. They seized power in Nicaragua because the opposition, headed by the corrupt dictator Somoza, was even worse. They lost it because they deserved to lose it. The only explanation I can imagine for Galeano's fascination for Sandinistas is their habit of fixing up visiting leftist writers with pretty young girls as "guides."

The last and most serious flaw in Galeano's thinking, as I have already intimated, is the notion that the poor are always right, and everyone else is an oppressive bastard. Oye, Señor Eduardo, sometimes the poor are poor because they are stupid, lazy, dishonest or totally lacking in talent and ambition. Not always, but sometimes.

Instaurationists who have an interest in the Hispanic hinterlands of the Western Hemisphere should pick up one of Galeano's books pronto. English translations are available in paperback, so they won't cost anyone his life savings.

N.B. FORREST

An agent of evolution?

AIDS: The Third World's Ethnic Cleanser

Instauration's front-page editorial (June 1992) on the death of America described the first phase of the West's collapse. (The typical, deracinated American white TV-hypnotizee considers dying with the most toys to be "winning;" Instauration regards it simply as dying.) The next phase, as with all deaths, will see the elimination of the unfit by biological agents. With the completion of that stage, the insane, centuries-long war of white racial suicidists on evolution will have run its full and horrific course.

"Alas," an over-anxious white contemplator of these facts is tempted to say, "we are done for!" Not so, my friends. Lift up your heads and look at the larger picture: the Grim Reaper is drawing nigh, with winnowing fan in hand.

Biologists have noted that all species have built-in "safety catches" which prevent them from overpopulating their environment. Since man's environment is worldwide, only a global restraining agent could prevent him from suffocating the earth with his numbers and stupidity. That agent is AIDS.

The HIV is not Mother Earth's only biological means of defense. Also materializing today are new versions of old plagues: drug-resistant tuberculosis imported into the U.S. inside yellow-brown androids from Southeast Asia; insecticide-immune bugs bearing upgraded parasites such as the debilitating Lyme disease; eerie and fearsome new mutants of streptococcal bacteria. And we do not yet know what additional surprises Gaia, Mother Earth, has in store for us. But AIDS is certainly her corps of shock troops, her Death's Head SS.

No sensible white should seek to join the "war" on AIDS. Indeed, our appropriate attitude should be silence, not an off-putting, toothless mimicry of the anti-AIDS blatherers: "Tsk, tsk, yes, it's really awful how those poor Afro-Americans, Haitians and black Africans, and all of those other culturally rich peoples are being driven to extinction by AIDS! By the way, what's the weather going to be like tomorrow?"

White doctors and medical researchers should not be lured into devoting their talents to the Bug. There are other more important medical problems. Those who cannot resist the bait of money in the AIDS-research trap should follow the example of government-funded boondogglers everywhere: spending most of their time inventing reasons why no hard results issue from said research. Even better, appoint an AIDS-infected, melanin-rich creature the nominal head of the research section to protect wheel-spinning researchers against political protests. Best of all, let the colored care for the AIDS-infected. On Saturday, October 3, 1992, the Associated Press let it slip that, while normal health care workers rarely (i.e., less than 1 per 10,000) catch the lentivirus in their normal duties, the risk varies considerably, depending on whether they work in hospitals that see sizable numbers of infected people and whether they do procedures that put them in contact with blood. According to the federal Centers for Disease Control, 31 cases of on-the-job infections have been documented among health care workers; 65 others are suspected of having gotten the virus this way.

AIDS is the Apocalypse. No one knows how often or how long ago the HIV retrovirus invaded man, perhaps from the lower primates, maybe thousands of times and hundreds of years before we noticed it. But only when Third Worldlings ballooned in numbers to a critical mass, thereby enabling a self-sustaining contagion, could this primate safety catch show its true nature. We have come to know from the study of other parasites that many of them take control, not just of the body of their hosts, but of their psychology and behavior as well, making these hosts behave in bizarre ways that are beneficial to the spread of the parasite. Consequently, when we hear AIDS-infectedes scream for "education" in "safe sex" (somewhat like the alcohol industry's preaching "drink in moderation" to teenagers), we may in fact be witnessing the results of a kind of invasion of the body snatchers. Let them spread this parasites' gospel throughout the Third World. Let us ourselves recognize it for what it is: death with a human voice.

Those who do not recognize the cunning of Nature will continue to screech for the scientific genie to perform a magic disappearing technotrick on the retrovirus. But that will never be, as AIDS conference after AIDS conference is slowly beginning to reveal. It is impossible to find a "cure" for a parasite which actually becomes part of the genome. Negresses are especially susceptible to infection from ordinary coitus, since they do not have the same innate resistance as white females. Too bad for all the black welfare queens. And the plague is spreading fast. It has, among other targets, already implanted itself in about 10% of the migrant workers in the U.S.

As the AIDS pestilence grinds on, a number of indicators point to a much higher rate of survival for us whites, who comprise only about 15% of humanity. By all odds, the coloreds present by far the largest target. Moreover, none of the nonwhite races displays the level of genetic diversity we do. As far as an HIV bacterium is concerned, when it has seen one Negro, it has seen them all. Ditto for the subdivisions of the Asiatics. Whites, by contrast, are more genetically diverse, hence harder for the microbes to adapt to—and the greater variation makes it much more likely that when naturally immune humans do emerge, they will be whites, not the cookie-cutter forms that populate the darker regions of the globe.

Aside from drug addicts, male homo- and bisexuals are the most active spreaders of AIDS among whites. So far, female homosexuals have presented no health threat. According to Anne Moir and David Jessel in Brain Sex: The Real Difference between Men and Women (Lyle Stuart, N.Y., 1991, p. 113), gays constitute about 4%, lesbians only about 1%, of their respective sexes. That is, only about 2% of the total white (European-descended) population in the U.S. is male homosexual. Even if we double this number to allow for marginal error, still only 4% of all white males could be considered behaviorally AIDS-prone. Moreover, pharmacological interference with fetal brain growth by barbiturates, such as those prescribed to about 25% of pregnant American women in the 1950s and 60s (op. cit., p. 123), can also result in male homosexuality. (The brain only imperfectly changes from the basic female template to the male variant,¹ in these cases.) Also, the catastrophic use, by whites, of psychotropic drugs for "recreational" purposes is almost certainly playing a major role in fetal brain and neural damage. Thus the 2% (or 4%) figure may be higher than is normal for the white race, over time, since barbiturates (and other biopollution) are historically recent phenomena.

Considering the critical role of sodomy in the spread of AIDS, it is important to understand the evolutionary origins of this behavior, which we whites call abnormal. Studies of how apes and Afros act, the standard anthropological method of determining what our own primitive ancestors once did, reveal that male homosexuality is a normal practice for those members who have lost out to the alpha males in the competition for females. Among these near-human primates, homosexuality serves as such an important agent in the male bonding process that the non-alphas stay around on the periphery of the tribe to protect it. The procedure is also a way of showing the female-like submission of the non-alphas to the alphas. Homoerotic bonding and social-precedence acknowledgment of this type among males were presumably also the case among the ancestors of man. (Bear in mind that the human and chimpanzee genomes differ by only 1% of their makeup.) However, as the human line evolved, its brain grew larger and inhibitional powers stronger, and male homosexuality became less important as a survival strategy. The more advanced branches migrated away from sodomy and harem-keeping toward monogamy and more abstract means of asserting social preeminence or deferring to it.

However, the slightest problems in fetal development can impair the growth of the more recent evolutionary characteristics, leaving the individual at the more primitive stage with respect to the affected characteristics. This leads to the "birth defect" recrudescence of homosexuality among about 4% of the white male population, as mentioned previously. This percentage, however, is very small, compared with conditions among nonwhites. Among the less advanced races, especially the Negroes and Proto-mongoloids (Amerinds and Eskimos), we find male homosexuality (and harems) much more prevalent than among the more advanced. Although exact numbers are unavailable, it is clearly this condition which the AIDS virus is exploiting in order to eliminate these less advanced forms. Healthy whites of Northern European stock practice the least sodomy, followed by healthy northern Mongoloids. The least advanced and mixed-race types follow the evolutionarily older routes. Interpreted in moral terms, evolutionary stages that have been surpassed or bypassed are always viewed as bad. For this reason normal Northern European males instinctively find sodomy abhorrent and repulsive. In contrast, the more primitive, darker types, who do not share our instincts and inhibitions, cannot understand why we are so "uptight" about it. Despite their incomprehension, the promotion of lower primate male homosexuality as an "alternative life style" for whites is a direct attack, not just on individual white "bigoted racists" but on evolution itself. AIDS may be evolution's response to that attack.

Today, most homosexuals have been educated to hate normal white heterosexual society. In their heart of hearts, they would like to see it destroyed, as would the compassion industry. Homosexuals seek to enshrine special prerogatives for themselves into law, under the guise of "protection" against "gay-bashers." With their strong presence in politics,² in the media, in the apparel industry³ and the arts, these hate-filled birth defectives are well positioned to nullify opposition to the spread of HIV. In the incipient guerrilla war in which we are now engaged, the only safe alternative for an evolution-affirming white male is to consider all homosexuals as probable vectors of The Thing.

Male homosexuality, of course, is not the only avenue of infection. There are many (especially drug-addicted) individuals out there who have HIV and know it, yet deliberately continue to practice unsafe sex. These people are cold-blooded murderers. They are encouraged in their lethal fun by the media elites who, except for their insane diabolization of pro-evolutionary whites, utterly deny the existence of moral evil. This denial is accomplished by projecting all responsibility for personal perversity upon society at large. The media's refrain is always that, since society or "the system" is led by "racist white males," everyone "shares" guilt. The result is the ever swifter advance of AIDS.

To sum up: all the shouting about AIDS is basically an attempt by nonwhite supremacists and white suicidists to propagate their anti-evolutionary habits, practices and propaganda with impunity. But, the "compassionate" white lovers of the dark race notwithstanding, the latter are in for harder and harder times, despite the ear-splitting volume of their drivel.

By the year 2020, a vast number of Third Worlders may be HIV positive, and by 2050 it is even possible that they may well be on their way to extinction.⁴ Meanwhile, it would help things if the darker components of our species gravitated to a sodomitically uninhibited religion such as Islam or some tropical cult. Then, in the latter half of the next century, we would be ready for the next stage of evolution.

O'REGAN

(1) Note that this is in direct contrast to the mistaken view of Aristotle, who taught that the male gender was the only authentic gender, the female constituting a deformity in design. The primitive Biblical myth about the primordial female being created from the male's rib is another attempt to downplay the female gender. In both scenarios the true priorities of mammalian morphogenesis are inverted. As happens all too frequently, the antiquity of belief has masked and even hallowed falsehood.

(2) According to Instauration (Sept. 1992, p. 28), Don Chapman, the columnist of a local newspaper in Palos Township, a Chicago suburb, asserts that an "estimated 40% of the members of Congress are homosexuals." If this percentage is even a quarter correct, then it is clear that the anti-evolutionary nature of the American system of government is driven not merely by flawed ideas, but also by physiologically defective brains mechanically seeking earth suicide.

(3) Oddly, a beneficial side effect of the transvestitism-bordering "unisex" fad in clothes has been the tendency for younger men to wear loose, even baggy pants, trousers and shorts. This counters the bad health effects of tight jeans and underwear, which press the testicles close to the body, raising their temperature and destroying sperm, a possible cause of sterility. The strange unisex clothing, together with some reduction in smoking in the population at large, may actually result in a rise in white fertility in coming years.

(4) Relatively unexplored up to now has been the possibility of insect transmission, as happens in the case of many other diseases, such as malaria. If the HIV figures out a way to use insects as a vector, its spread will be even more rapid, especially in the tropics, where the vast majority of the less advanced forms of mankind still live.

Two “Scholarly” Books on Duke

David Duke: Evolution of a Klansman by Michael Zatarain (1990, Pelican Publishing Co. Inc., 1101 Monroe St., Gretna, LA 70053) and The Emergence of David Duke and the Politics of Race, edited by Douglas Rose (1992, University of North Carolina Press, P.O. Box 2288, Chapel Hill, NC 27515).

David Duke was the right man at the right time in the right place. The assault upon whites in America has, in the past few decades, moved from mere dispossession to a hate-filled degradation, the result of a half-century of incessant propaganda, orchestrated mainly by history’s most malevolent people. But while propaganda can twist facts, it cannot obliterate them. Cultural and racial dynamics are a major fact in contemporary America. Their distortion and suppression creates a pressure in the body politic that a fearless and ambitious man can ride to prominence and power.

Duke seized the moment. In doing so he angered the Rejectionists among us, for he had to shape his message to allow it to be absorbed with minimal discomfort by the greatest number. But Michael Zatarain, author of one of two recent books on Duke, was probably correct when he wrote that Duke has never wavered from his basic belief that white people are the real minority on earth and that they need someone to protect their interests and heritage.

No doubt David “used” people. All those who write their names in the history books “use” their comrades, and in the process greatly irritate their less radical and more stodgy contingent of supporters. If memory serves, I believe that the fellow who wrote Mein Kampf expressed disgust that the first meeting he attended of what was to become the National Socialist German Workers Party reeked of “club life of the worst kind.” Zatarain quotes Duke:

Some members [of the KKK] were more interested in the trappings and the ceremonies and the tradition of the Klan than in making real social change for the white race. . . . All groups have real meaning only as a means to an end.

When Duke was a student at Louisiana State University, says Zatarain, “[H]e had succeeded in creating the kind of emotion that made people listen.” Duke and his message—however oblique it may have become in its final, customized-for-the-masses version—triggered deep and powerful feelings in the souls of the dwindling white majority. His high-profile runs for senator and governor heartened millions of our people and frightened millions of our enemies. It is not surprising that these two volumes have been spawned in the wake of his effort, in addition to the blizzard of newspaper and magazine articles.

The Zatarain biography is balanced and somewhat sympathetic. On the other hand, the book from the University of North Carolina Press is a collection of post-mortem, tea-leaf readings by anguished antiwhite liberals. Its editor, though, wishes everyone to know that it is not a hatchet job on a Southerner who became the symbol of white resistance amidst the gathering madness. The introduction states that “our research is not about David Duke as a person—we do not try to answer questions such as ‘is he normal?’” The collection of essays masquerades as a high-class and scholarly treatise with plenty of references and charts, decorated here and there with the arcane jargon of sociology. If this is not enough to convince you, take note that the editor, Douglas Rose, a Tulane political science professor, identifies himself as “a scholar who now studies David Duke.”

Get the picture? Don’t be put off by the fact that Elizabeth A. Rickey, a Republican Party hack turned amateur sleuth, devotes several pages to her inquisition into Duke’s book-selling operation. She practically relit the fires of Torquemada when she discovered that the heretical candidate was still selling books that were on the liberal Index Librorum Prohibitorum. (Could it be that scholarly liberals are only opposed to witch-hunting and book-burning when their own tails are being singed?)

Nor should we be put off because one of the writers, in lifting a Duke quote from an interview in the February 1989 issue of Instauration, refers to the world’s most irrepressible magazine as a “neo-Fascist publication” and then assigns the date of the quoted article as December 1988 (even scholars err). Nor should we be astonished that an essay by the editor carries the scholarly title: “DuKKKe For Governor.” Nevertheless, since the Duke campaigns were a severe stumbling block to the controlling antiwhite forces in America, and since the Culture Distorters considered the electoral process to be their sole possession, some of the analysis here is of interest. Indeed, it is even possible to separate the grass from the weeds. Several of the chapters are virtual “must reading” for those with an interest in Whiteside electoral politics—especially for anyone who may be contemplating a future campaign for public office. As one contributor correctly comments, Duke’s success “may show the way to others who share his ideology or his ambitions.”

The large number of voters who repeatedly cast their ballots for Duke unnerved the antiwhite contingents. After all, as Douglas Rose and Gary Esolen point out, votes have a way of legitimizing candidates. “To denigrate a candidate is to denigrate his or her supporters.” It is an article of faith among the anti-qualitarians and the enemies of meriocracy that some kind of "error" in combating Duke must have been made, since "the masses" are at heart good people who really don't mind mudstained folk traipsing through their neighborhoods and their bloodlines. What went wrong? That, basically, is the theme of this tome.

It has always been traumatic for Western-hating intellectuals—toting about their ponderous baggage of theoretical tripe—when "workers" give their support to the enemies of etiolated internationalists. These white working people who vote or act in their own interests have sometimes been scorned as "lumpenproletariat." Douglas Rose says "working-class authoritarians would be at home" in Duke's Louisiana neighborhood. Many of Duke's most loyal supporters were blue-collar Catholics and registered Democrats. Were they "authoritarians" when they voted for Jack Kennedy or Lyndon Johnson?

Whether you believe that Duke is a hero or a villain, it is undeniable that he is a master at using the media. Both media expert Gary Esolen and Zatarain provide some instructive and amusing examples. The former quotes a TV producer who had carefully prepared an anti-Duke interview—all for naught.

Duke would listen carefully and attentively to the question, smile, make eye contact with my interviewer, and then deliver his pre-packaged message, which had no relation to the question asked.

Esolen thinks that Duke's interview techniques can be summed up as, "Why are they picking on me, and don't white people have rights, too?"

Regarding Duke's successful campaign for state representative, Zatarain writes:

It was as though Duke controlled the flow of the daily newsThe media made Duke a political superstar and he took every advantage it offered him.

After the election a fellow legislator is quoted as complaining: "This guy's here in office a week, and he's been in the papers more than Huey and Earl Long put together."

Some contributors to the Rose book labor mightily to state the obvious. One talks at length about the whites who voted for Duke as being "under stress." Naturally, a scholar would not deign to determine if that stress were caused by the close proximity of a culturally and genetically primitive people turned violent predators and welfare leeches. This stress can also be a radicalizing agent, as another writer notes: "Analysts who argue that Duke's past hurts his electoral chances overlook that his extremist history ironically renders him a more powerful voice for 'white people' than anyone without his baggage could possibly become." (This sick scholar is so distressed by the term, white people, that he feels obliged to encapsulate it in quotes.)

Whitesiders interested in public office can use the Duke campaigns as textbooks. Hopefully they will emulate Duke's first campaign by running for local, rather than statewide, office. Duke's statewide races illustrate a fundamental problem for Whiteside candidates soliciting votes over a wide geographical area. A pro-white candidate can only obtain significant numbers of votes where populations are under "stress," i.e., where whites live within gunshot of large black populations. In extended area elections the black bloc vote will combine with that of the white sellouts and cowards to forestall victory. Duke, after all, received a healthy majority of the white vote in both his campaigns for senator and governor.

As for Duke himself, if his political fires still burn, it may be best if he runs for Congress from his home district (although Rose claims he lost even that in his gubernatorial campaign). From the pulpit in Washington he could serve as the voice of the dispossessed and disheartened whites. He informed Zatarain that the issues I am most interested in can but be addressed on a national level. . . .If the deterioration of the white middle class continues, then I will be president.

A move to D.C. seems the best way to begin that journey.

Racial Egalitarianism: Science or Distorted Ideology?

In every society there are social groups whose self-elected task is to provide an interpretation of the world. These social groups, the culture-bearing strata, usually enjoy a monopolistic control over molding a society's worldview. When the values and interests of these cultural elites distort the acquisition of scientific knowledge, social and intellectual progress becomes impeded.

America is no exception to this sociological process. It has its own culture-bearing strata and media elite which effectively mold public opinion. One of the most influential of these mind-shaping groups is the Jewish political and cultural establishment. In the words of political scientists Stanley Rothman and S. Robert Lichter, "Americans of Jewish background have become an elite group in American society, with a cultural influence far beyond their numbers."¹

Definite forms of social consciousness derive from the fact that this Jewish elite controls a significant slice of the power structure in the U.S., making it relatively easy for Jews to impose their preconceptions and predispositions on the country at large. Since few intellectuals ever think to question these preformed patterns of thought, intelligentsia and the public remain locked in a dogmatic slumber.

Stephen Jay Gould, a leading member of the Jewish power elite, is renowned for applying biological knowledge to social and political problems.² In an almost endless series of books and essays, he has set himself up to be one of the ablest and most dedicated proponents of racial egalitarianism. As we shall see, Gould approaches his favorite subject with an ideological tilt that relentlessly reflects and serves the interests of the Chosen.

In a chapter from his book, The Flamingo's Smile, Gould summarizes his anthropological ideas by claiming that human equality is a contingent fact of history³ and that there are only insignificant biological differences between races. In his opinion, a myriad of different and plausible scenarios for human evolution would have yielded other results.

Gould first states the case for racial inequality, as argued by the late American anthropologist, Carleton Coon, who claimed the modern races of men are, to a large extent, biologically different. Expatiating on Coon's views, Gould writes:

Coon divided humanity into five major races—Caucasoids, Mongoloids, Australoids, and among African blacks, Congoids and Capoids. He claimed that these five groups had already become distinct subspecies [races] during the reign of our ancestor, Homo erectus. Homo erectus then evolved toward Homo sapiens [modern man] in five parallel streams, each traversing the same path toward increased consciousness [pp. 189-90].

Coon, according to Gould, asserted that the division of our [human] lineage into modern races had occurred so long ago that differences, accumulating slowly through time, have now built unbridgeable chasms. Though once alike in an apish dawn, human races are now separate and unequal [pp. 187-89].

Coon further believed that humans emerged from prehuman ancestors in Africa and developed their intelligence in Asia. He is supposed to have remarked: "If Africa was the cradle of mankind, it was only an indifferent kindergarten. Europe and Asia were our principal schools [p. 192]."

Gould has two rebuttals. First, he claims that parallel evolution of such precision in so many lineages [racial groups] seems almost impossible on grounds of mathematical probability alone. Could five separate subspecies [races of men] undergo such substantial changes and yet remain so similar at the end that all can still interbreed freely, as modern races so plainly do? In the light of these empirical implausibilities, we must view Coon's thesis more as the last gasp of a dying tradition than a credible synthesis of available evidence [p. 190].

Gould's second rebuttal:

Evidence is not yet conclusive, but latest hints may be pointing toward an African origin for Homo sapiens as well. . . . Every human species may have evolved first in Africa and only then—for the latest species of Homo—spread elsewhere [p. 192].

In Gould's view mankind acquired all its major characteristics (including intelligence) in Africa, then spread out through Asia and Europe. If Gould is correct, then the groups that went to Asia and Europe did not have enough time to evolve substantial differences. In essence, he is saying that because the division of humanity into separate races has occurred so recently in human history, the races must be biologically equal.

In answer to Gould's rejection of the theory that parallel evolution of "such precision" could occur in so many human lineages, it should be pointed out that one of evolution's major axioms is, "Related species, because of the similarity of their genetic and developmental organization, may evolve along nearly parallel paths."⁴ Isn't it also possible that different races, which are even more similar to each other than some related species because of their genetic similarity, may evolve along similar paths? If a series of groups (potential races) diverge from the parent species, the reproductive mechanisms of these groups may stay so similar over a long period of time that their members may still be able to freely interbreed, although other organic systems may evolve substantial biological differences.

Different races have noticeably different skulls. Anthropologist Louis Leaky has stated that a trained eye can tell the race of a human skull after a cursory examination.⁵ Anthropologist Raymond Firth has this to say about the subject:

The attempt to bring anatomy and psychology together in the study of racial differences would seem to be most fruitful in the examination, not of the mere size and weight of the brain, but of the subtlety of its structure. But here the anatomist shows greatest caution. J. Shellshear, for instance, in a careful study of 44 brains of Australian aborigines, points out that certain features of these brains do not seem to be developed to the extent that they are in European peoples; and the most fully developed of the Australian brains would look ill-formed and underdeveloped as compared with, say, a fully developed Chinese brain.⁶

Dr. Firth continues:

But so far as existing types of man are concerned, differences in brain size do not seem to be significant as an index of the relative mental capacity of races. The study of brain weights, too, has not yielded any definite results. Some publicity locally has been gained by the work of Gordan and Vint, who have attempted to show that there are differences in the size, type, and rate of growth of African brains as compared with European brains. Gordan, from skull measurement, has stated that the average rate of annual increase of the European brain between the ages ten and twenty is about double that of a native brain during the same period. Vint found the average weight of the African brain to be 10.6 percent less than the average weight of the European male adult brain. Moreover, he found a quantitative deficiency in the brain cortex of Africans of 15 percent as compared with that of Europeans, the cells of the cortex being qualitatively deficient in size, form and arrangement. These investigations are interesting from the anatomical point of view, and may point to valid differences.⁷

It turns out that, in the case of humans, different races did evolve significant differences in their skulls, brains and nervous systems, despite the fact that their reproductive systems remained so similar. This means that long periods of time (in geological terms) are not needed for significant biological differences to evolve. The distinguished biologist Richard Goldsby is in full agreement:

Given the inefficiency of race formation when neither selection nor isolation is absolute, just how many generations might be necessary for the differentiation of a parent population into clearly recognizable racial varieties? The answer comes from studies of race formation in the house sparrow. The founding population of sparrows was introduced into America in 1852. From an East Coast zone of entry, succeeding generations have spread west to California, south into Mexico, and north into Canada. Populations of sparrows can now be found in damp coastal areas of Louisiana and in the dry, hot deserts of Arizona. Today one can demonstrate that different geographical populations of sparrows show characteristic differences in color, wing length, bill length and body weight. Using these differences as guides, more than a dozen racial varieties of sparrows can be identified. . . . Before the results of this study were published a few years ago, evolutionary theorists assumed that more than 1,000 generations would be necessary for racial differentiation in birds. The discovery that all these races of sparrows evolved within 100 generations came as a bombshell. It is clear that in nature evolution at the racial level can be extremely rapid. In a human population 100 generations cover a time span of about 2,000 years. These studies suggest that given a reasonable degree of isolation and selection pressure, relatively short periods may be required for the elaboration of some racial characteristics in man.⁸

Even if, as Gould maintains, the division of humans into modern racial groups happened only tens of thousands of years ago, significant genetic changes could have occurred in this small amount of geological time. The irony is that Gould's own theory concerning evolutionary change, "Punctuated Equilibria," may very well account for the evolution of significant genetic differences between human races in a relatively small amount of geological time.⁹ He postulated that a species changes rapidly as it comes into existence (i.e., diverges from the parent species), but quite slowly thereafter. Why then couldn't human races have changed rapidly as they came into existence? The authority on evolutionary biology, Douglas Futuyma, reminds us, "the pace of . . . evolutionary change in general, varies from the imperceptibly slow to the very rapid."¹⁰

For the moment, let's assume Gould's claim that modern races are characterized by remarkably small genetic differences is correct. Even so, such minuscule genetic differences between two racial groups can lead to dramatic, observable results. Consider sickle-cell anemia, a severe hereditary disease that afflicts a high percentage of black Africans and black Americans, but is virtually absent among South African and American whites.¹¹ According to Life On Earth by E.O. Wilson and Thomas Eisner, "The sickle-cell condition is under the control of a single gene."¹² If a person has a "double dose" of the gene, he dies in childhood or suffers from chronic anemia. Endowed with a "single dose," a person shows signs of anemia only under conditions of stress, while displaying markedly greater resistance to malaria than those lacking the gene. Consequently, a small genetic difference, when caused by only one gene between two racial groups,

Gould is blind to major racial differences leads to significant differences between them in resistance to malaria and susceptibility to anemia.

This could very well hold true for many other behavioral characteristics. Two groups, A and B, sharing 99% of the same human genes, can be virtually identical. Nevertheless, if the 1% of variation occurs in a characteristic that determines success in a certain endeavor (e.g., mathematics), then group A might produce 90% of the mathematicians.

Gould won't buy any argument that damages his egalitarian theories:

Some species are divided into distinct geographic races. Consider, for example, an immobile species separated on drifting continental blocks. Since these subpopulations never meet, they may evolve substantial differences. We might still choose to name subspecies [races] for such discrete geographic variation. But humans move about and maintain the most notorious habits of extensive interbreeding. We are not well enough divided into distinct geographic groups, and the naming of human subspecies makes little sense [pp. 193-94].

Gould's raciology is based on the fallacy that, because there are no strict boundaries between races, there are no substantial differences between them. Granted, there has been interbreeding between races, but the ensemble of gene frequencies which characterizes one race is significantly different from that of another. Biologist Richard Goldsby emphasizes this point when he writes, "one finds that natural races, unlike the rigidly isolated races of domestic breeds, tend to be separated by intergrading zones rather than by sharp lines of demarcation. . ."¹³

Gould ripostes:

We might make a reasonable division [into races] on skin color, only to discover that blood groups imply different alliances. When so many good characters exhibit such discordant patterns of variation, no valid criterion can be established for unambiguous definition of subspecies [races].

Dr. Goldsby would disagree that "a race is a breeding population characterized by frequencies of a collection of inherited traits that differ from those of other populations of the same species." Goldsby would also have reservations about another of Gould's statements: "If, God forbid, the holocaust occurs and only the Xhosa people of the southern tip of Africa survived, the human species would still retain 80% of its variation [p. 196]."

But the 20% variation not present in these backward blacks may be one of the major reasons why they never reached the level of civilization of the Europeans and Japanese.

Gould, of course, would consider the above statement an example of the worst form of racism. He would probably answer it with another dig at the anti-egalitarians:

Human groups do vary strikingly in a few highly visible characters [skin color, hair form]—and these external differences may fool us into thinking that overall divergence must be great. But we now know that our usual metaphor of superficiality—skin deep—in literally accurate [p. 196].

This claim is flat-out false. That there are marked differences—physically and mentally—between the races has been documented for centuries. In 1872, Charles Darwin noted:

There is, however, no doubt that the various races, when carefully compared and measured, differ much from each other,—as in the texture of the hair, the relative proportions of all parts of the body, the capacity of the lungs, the form and capacity of the skull, and even the convolutions of the brain. But it would be an endless task to specify the numerous points of difference. The races differ also in constitution, in acclimatization and liability to certain diseases. Their mental characteristics are likewise very distinct; chiefly as it would appear in their emotional, but partly in their intellectual facilities.¹⁴

The British biologist and authority on racial differences, John Baker, pointed out that African Bushmen are very different in physical characteristics—indeed in certain respects astonishingly different—from both Europids [Europeans] and Australoids [Australian aborigines] and thus show particularly clearly how wrong it is to suggest that there are few differences between races, apart from skin color.¹⁵

Psychologist Arthur Jensen has a long list of racial differences:

Let us consider some of the genetically conditioned characteristics that we already know to vary between major racial groups: body size and proportions; cranial size and shape; pigmentation of the hair, skin and eyes; bone density; basic-metabolic rate; sweating; consistency of ear wax; age of eruption of the permanent teeth; fissural patterns on the surfaces of the teeth; blood groups; chronic diseases; frequency of twinning; male-female birth ratio; visual and auditory acuity; colorblindness; taste; length of gestation period, physical maturity at birth.¹⁶

Daniel G. Friedman, a psychologist at the University of Chicago, has researched racial differences with a series of studies on the behavior of newborn infants of several racial origins. He detected significant average differences in locomotion, posture, muscular tone of various parts of the body, and emotional response that cannot be reasonably be explained as the result of training or even conditioning within the womb. Chinese-American newborns, for example, tend to be less changeable, less easily perturbed by noise and movement, better able to adjust to new stimuli and discomfort, and quicker to calm themselves than Caucasian-American infants. To use more precise phrasing, it can be said that a random sample of infants whose ancestors originated in certain parts of China differ in these behavioral traits from a comparable sample of European ancestry.¹⁷

The average IQ difference between black and white populations in the United States is about 15 points, hardly a small variation. Although a discussion of the “Race-IQ” controversy is beyond the scope of this paper, the difference is due, for the most part, to genetic factors.¹⁸ Furthermore, there is a noticeable variance between blacks and whites in running and swimming ability.¹⁹

What does Gould’s scientific egalitarianism have to do with his politics? An avowed Marxist, he is on the editorial board of Patterns of Prejudice, a publication sponsored by the pro-Zionist

ADL and World Jewish Congress.²⁰ Although these two Jewish organizations rabidly oppose all forms of “white racism,” they remain ardent supporters of the racist state of Israel.²¹

During a visit to South Africa, Gould bemoaned that it is a “nation most committed to the myths of inequality [p. 186].” Here his Jewish biases are exposed for all to see. An objective observer would have named Israel along with South Africa as a nation devoted to apartheid, the strict separation of races. In spite of Gould’s hatred of the South African variety, nowhere does he condemn Israeli apartheid. This omission is well documented by the Israeli scholar, Uri Davis.²² Gould blames white Gentiles for establishing South African apartheid and antimiscegenation laws (p. 194), while failing to note that Israel has similar laws. Among other restrictions, Jews in Israel are forbidden by religious law, approved by the state, from marrying non-Jews.²³ As the political analyst, Ivor Benson, writes:

It must be a source of infinite wonder and self-congratulation among the Jews to find that the whole world seems not to have noticed that what they so passionately condemn as “apartheid” is only an Afrikaans version of what they . . . practice under the name of Zionism—namely, racial and national self-preservation and self-determination.²⁴

Even if we grant Gould the benefit of the doubt and assume that only insignificant genetic differences distinguish one race from another, the collective right of Europeans to live in a non-black society separate and distinct from non-Europeans can be justified on the same grounds that give Israeli Jews a right to live in a society separate and distinct from Palestinian Arabs.

Equal treatment for all races—that is, equal rights for all races—is an ethical principle that should be carved in stone. The authority on international law, Louis Rene Bernes, put it in a nutshell: “[T]he right of every people and every nation to self-determination is taken as a cardinal element of civilized international relations.”²⁵ Another cardinal element is that a people, culture or race has the right to preserve and perpetuate their collective racial-cultural identity. International law recognizes the right of self-determination by charging anybody or any group that performs actions which destroy the racial-cultural identity of a group with the crime of genocide.²⁶

The right of white people to self-determination and self-preservation does not have to be hinged on any factual statement about human biology. As stated above, it can be safely tied to the two cardinal tenets of international law that do justify white South Africa’s right to a society separate and distinct from black South Africa. Even dyed-in-the-wool liberals admit there are distinct non-biological, cultural differences between South African blacks and whites. An integrated society with black majority rule would be tantamount to black domination over whites, a clear violation of white South Africa’s right to self-determination.

If Gould’s racial egalitarianism is not an accurate reflection of factual reality, whose interests and needs does it reflect and serve? If it is not derived from scientific evidence, what is its derivation?

Gould is noted for showing the ways in which science is embedded in culture, how cultural beliefs and practices influence the fashioning of scientific theories. The question is, how have Jewish cultural needs, interests and behavior patterns formed and shaped his racial egalitarianism?

In this century in America, Jews, despite their power and influence, still retain an alien mentality. According to the Jewish political commentator, Norman Podhoretz, many prominent Jewish intellectuals “did not feel that they belonged to America or that America belonged to them.”²⁷ Arthur Liebman, the Jewish sociologist, revealed in his study, Jews and the Left, that at one time the majority of American Jewish intellectuals viewed American society as "the enemy."²⁸ Political scientists Stanley Rothman and S. Robert Lichter found that one of the outstanding psychological characteristics of the Jewish leftist is his hostility towards Western culture.²⁹ Since Western civilization is the product of Europeans, it follows that leftist Jews would attack the culture's biological foundations. By blurring the genetic distinctions between races, Jews are able to chip away at the genetic heritage of Westerners.

Get the picture? Zionists, while building a state exclusively for Jews and inculcating their own people with a sense of patriotic nationalism, are promoting racial integration in the Gentile world. This hypocritical double standard on racial matters is something deeply entrenched in Jewish cultural values. Ivor Benson comments:

Dr. Nahum Goldman put it with astonishing frankness: "We [the Jews] are at one time the most separatist and most universalist people in the world". . . [H]e makes it quite clear that the separatism is for "us," the Jews and the universalism for "them," the Gentiles—another version of the Pigs' doctrine in George Orwell's Animal Farm: "All animals are equal, but some are more equal than others."³⁰

Although Jews have long been in the forefront of the movement for black-white racial integration in the U.S.,³¹ at the same time they are ardent supporters of apartheid in Israel. Israeli scholar Dr. Israel Shahak remarks on the paradox:

For more than 200 years Jews have been demanding equality in every country in which they happened to live, with the notable exception of Israel, the Jewish state. Israel has always based its institutions on the denial of equality to non-Jews. This principle derives from the tenets of Zionism which, from its very inception, long before the establishment of Israel, staunchly opposed equality for non-Jews.³²

Owing to their small numbers, Jews must utilize coalitions to succeed in politics. Historically speaking, one of the mainstays of Jewish political influence in the U.S. has been the black-Jewish civil rights coalition. As Arthur Jensen notes:

The civil rights movement that gained momentum in the 1950s "required" liberal academic adherence to the theory that environment was responsible for any individual or racial behavioral differences, and the corollary belief in genetic equality of intelligence.³³

The whole point of this study is that Gould's racial egalitarianism is, to a significant extent, an ideological distortion which serves the interests of the Jewish power elite. Racial egalitarianism is the ideology which "justifies" and "legitimizes" the goals of the black-Jewish coalition which has been a mainstay of Jewish power. Racial egalitarianism also serves the psychological needs of the Jewish leftist. Viewing himself as a cultural alien to Western society, he identifies with ideologies which undermine the culture's genetic foundations. Finally, racial egalitarianism is an ideology which lays bare the hypocritical moral standards of Jewish culture—racial separation for "we Jews," racial integration for "you Gentiles."

Gould is correct on at least one point. He claims that theories of "racial differences" have been used to justify and excuse such evils as slavery and racial domination (pp. 186-87). But this in no way falsifies these theories. Modern physics, for example, has created nuclear weapons, which in turn have led to the evils of mass destruction. This in no way falsifies Quantum Physics.

The views expressed here are not to be confused with "white supremacy," which implies that whites should dominate non-whites. The belief that Westerners have the right to self-determination and to preserve their distinct biological-cultural identity is not synonymous with the belief that they should lord it over and oppress non-Westerners.

International law says that a race or culture has the collective right to self-preservation and self-determination. Self-preservation literally means the right to preserve for posterity those factors which make a people unique, exclusive and separate from other peoples. How is Western civilization to endure if its members are inculcated with a distorted ideology, racial egalitarianism, that discourages Westerners from preserving their unique heritage? Let us be wary of distorted ideologies and the power elites that promote them.
